Tricky Play

♣ A:J

This hand came up in Match 6 of the Australian Junior Selection Butler. To make this contract we are going to need to establish and run the clubs. But we need two late entries to do this.

Heath Watkins found a nice play to give an extra chance of finding non-existent entries. He won the first trick with the SA! Then he cashed clubs from the top. The plan was to later lead the S2 and finesse the ST, knock out the last club and then the SK is the second entry to run the established clubs.

West could disrupt this plan by playing the SQ on the lead of the S2. But even if West finds this fine play, Heath's chosen line doesn't cost – you can always try leading towards the DQ as your second entry.

7 Deadly Sins of the Beer Card

During the Youth Pairs Final, we found ourselves defending 3NT by South after 1NT–3NT, all pass.

Holding a substantial collection of high-card points, I was keen to avoid conceding overtricks at matchpoints, and so resisted the gluttonous temptation to lead a spade. Instead, I chose the ♦A as the opening lead. Partner followed with the ♦9, declarer with the ♦J, leaving me with a life threatening decision. In pure wrath, I pondered why partner didn't encourage and have the QJ I needed. Was declarer playing from QJ8 or a similar holding, in which case persisting with diamonds might hand the contract to them on a platter? I greedily elected to continue the suit, cashing the ♦K—to my great relief, declarer's ♦Q appeared. At that point, it seemed prudent to press on with a third diamond. I catapulted the ♦4 like an archer releases an arrow, which declarer won with the ♦10 as partner contributed the ♦8.

Declarer then correctly finessed the ♦J, succeeded with the spade finesse, cashed the ♠A K, and collected four club tricks. However, the hand never quite came together: entries proved awkward, and declarer was unable to coordinate all suits effectively. Eventually, our heros regained the lead with the ♠Q, cashed the ♥A, and concluded proceedings by playing the ♦7, dethroning dummy's ♦6—for a satisfyingly neat defensive beer. My partner was highly envious of me making the beer card.

Leon's Squeeze

Leon took a tactical masterclass on squeezes playing 2NT in the individual:

In his doomed contract, the defence began with the HA and he wistfully and enviously looked out the window. If by divine intervention, the J fell by the Ace's hand, as his LHO continued with the HKQ. Leon wisely removed a spade, and the defence continued aloft with yet another heart, as he pitched a club. He carefully ran the Jack of clubs, which South won and played the K of clubs on which their partner pitched a diamond as Leon won the Ace.

He thought it prudent to win some tricks so he cashed the AK of diamonds which South played the T then showed out. Hence he knows that North has a 2641 shape, and that South is guarding both clubs and spades. Hence he was able to claim on a squeeze on South in the black suits, as he can now continue diamonds to force south to pitch cards from either clubs or spades!!

East led the CJ, which went to the CQ. The HK was cashed, East following with the HJ! The HA came next, making it look like East held HQJ9. Two clubs were cashed next, East pitching a diamond. The DK was cashed followed by running the DT, West electing to discard his last club. I then cashed my now good C7, discarding the SK from dummy, which West ruffed this time.

The defence continued with a spade, which dummy ruffed. The DJ was now ruffed (preserving the beer), followed by a heart to dummy's H10. Dummy's DA was cashed followed by the now good beer card!

Interview with Ada and Alex (but mostly Ada)

"Where are you from?"

Both: Brisbane

"What's your favourite subject at school?"

Ada: Alex likes maths and science.

Alex: Ada does swimming and track.

"How long have you been playing bridge?"

Ada: I started 2 years ago. My dad introduced me.

Alex: I started 6 years ago. My dad told me that bridge was better than chess.

"What is your favourite thing about bridge?"

Alex: MATHS!!!

Ada: I like just making people feel confused. No offence guys, I genuinely do. It makes me happy. It makes me feel like I did the right thing.

"Tell me an interesting story about each other."

Ada: Alex is every day in his spare time looking at one of 4 things: Flight radar, Apple Maps, Google Earth or weather. Every day he comes up to me and tells me the weather for 4 different countries. He also has memorised about 20 plane paths every day. And he knows all the suburbs of Bridge. I'll drive around and take a photo and send him this photo of a random road and he knows which road it is. He's also very good at Geometry Dash.

Alex:...

Ada: Tell them about the time you came to my swimming carnival and watched me swim. Or can you not even remember that?

Alex: No.

Ada (reading my next question before I've asked it): we've played together for 2 years.

Alex Wu and Ada Sun

Alex: At the ANC in Brisbane in June, people came up to me every morning and asked for a chocolate bar from the vending machine. Every single morning. And she (Ada) asked me for carrot cake every day as well.

Ada: We had $2 to spend, but he just wanted the salted peanuts. Who buys salted peanuts from a vending machine?

"Do you have a favourite bridge hand or type of play?"

Ada: We can talk about the board we played yesterday.

Alex: East opened 1H and West bid 3NT. I was North with 19 points. I was really confused. I asked what 3NT meant. I said I was confused. And declarer said oh I know why you're confused and then he proceeded to finesse me for everything.

Ada: I also super accepted with 14HCP. Our system card says occasional psyches. And we do.

Ada (again reading my script): Anything more to add?

Alex: I think we played better than we expected to. We just did better every single day.

Ada: I have so many interesting stories about you and you don't have a single one about me? You don't care about me?

Me: "This one time, Ada thought a bridge event started at 8am."

Ada: I called my mum and told her it starts at 8 and I need to be up at 7. You shouldn't tell me anything important after 8pm. 8pm is my bedtime. Also this "8am" event we're talking about is today's bridge. We just qualified for the Butler.

Alex: We just got back from the Gold Coast teams and came 3rd last. I wasn't so confident coming into this event.

Ada: Alex is a level 10 pianist. He just won the Qld piano contest. Also got a prize multiple times in the Qld maths competition.

Alex: Ada plays flute. She does way too many things.

Ada: Is that like a compliment???

Alex: Ada plays like chess, table tennis for 4 years, javelin and swam for 9 years now. She got top 3 in Australia for swimming.

Ada: I went to China in September for swimming training. It sucked. I died. I was like swimming for 7 hours a day. I sleep at noon and stuff. I haven't been swimming much recently. My biggest fear is drowning. That's why I don't do ocean swimming or triathlons. Do you do any sports Alex?

Alex: ...

Ada: No, I didn't think so. He's very humble. And he likes making weird sounds at weird times.

...

Natalee enters the room: Your voice is echoing all the way down the hall. And your voice (Ada) is the only one I can hear too.

Ada: At the airport, I was there at 2pm. Alex and his dad arrived at 11am. And he checked in his bags before I left the house. For a domestic flight.

Alex: The Jetstar check-in was messed up.

Ada: Will this interview be in the bulletin tomorrow?

Me: "Yes it will."

Ada: We're going to be famous!!!

The opening heart lead collected the HQ and HA, whereupon declarer played a spade to the S10 and SK. Ashley saw a better source of tricks than hearts and switched to the DQ, ducked to dummy's DK. Declarer then cashed 3 rounds of spades, North pitching a diamond and Ashley letting go a club. Declarer took a losing club finesse and I cashed the HK and DA. These cards remained:

When I returned the DT, Ashley overtook with the DJ! What's more he cashed his HT and D3 before finishing with the D7, taking the contract 3 down for +300 and a 100% board. At eight years old, I let Ashley cash it in as a coke card instead of waiting a decade.

Ashley also produced this defence during the same session:

In dummy for the last time, declarer led the CQ for a finesse. If Ashley wins this trick, it would be the last trick for the defence, as the HT goes on the DQ. So Ashley let the CQ hold! Declarer followed up with another club finesse. This time Ashley took the CK and returned a club for me to ruff. For good measure I was then on lead to cash the HJ and take the contract 2 down.

West has an awkward bunch of suits holdings to potentially lead from. Let's see what a simulation of 5000 hands would suggest offers the best prospects.

Lead card	% defeat	Ave tricks	Score
S6	8.18%	1.67	8
DK	6.92%	1.80	8
DT	6.64%	1.79	10
H3	6.54%	1.64	9
C7	4.70%	1.51	5

One important thing to note is that these simulation results are based on double dummy data. If partner has SQxx leading a trump will solve declarer's guess. But playing double dummy, the computer never had a guess to start with. So the simulation will favour a trump lead slightly more than we should at the table. As such, I've lowered the score for a trump lead.

The best lead is a diamond. Double dummy, the DK will work best – with opener showing 5+ clubs, 4 hearts and 3 spades, dummy is known to have at most a singleton diamond. So leading the DK allows us to hold the lead and lead through dummy's strong hand next.

At the table, partner may find a DK lead hard to read. If you and your partner have an understanding that opening leads can be unusual like this, go ahead... if you can work it out. Otherwise, you do best to lead the DT.

Finally, leading a club into a strong dummy with 5+ cards in the suit is not ideal.

If you think about the full layout of the hand, you are more likely to find the right reasons to lead (or avoid leading) certain suits.
